Since he was a kid, the performance of men in their jet fighters or space exploration has always fascinated Marc. To be a project research engineer was made for him.

He graduated as a research engineer from the famous French Ecole Centrale de Lyon and then trained at the University of Maryland and at EM Lyon Business School, he has always been attracted by complex subjects.

He is an entrepreneur at heart. He created several companies, including EngiNova in 2012, a company specialized in engineering and innovation that offers from conception to implementation of high technical solutions. He is the author of 14 patents in the areas of automotive, industrial containment, industrial painting cabin or a sailing rig.

His clients say that he is an “applied innovation expert in complex environments”, in other words he is the man of the ultimate solution!

Thrilling sports enthusiast, he has always dedicated his expertise at the service of innovation in extreme sports.

The convincing achievements in 2015? Two world speed records and several outstanding interventions in so called extreme industrial environments like nuclear plants.

He is married, has 4 children. He lives near Marseille, southern France.
