Will Kintish qualified as a chartered accountant in 1971 and was in general practice for the next 30 years.

At the start of the 21st century he changed his career and since then has shown thousands in the academic, professional and financial communities how to become more effective and confident networkers. Networking is fundamental to one's success yet so many people fear this activity. Will shows you how to overcome all your fears and concerns when working the room, how to spot lots of potential opportunities and how to follow up in a professional manner.

He is a Fellow of the Professional Speaking Association the highest accolade available in the speaking profession. Whether he runs workshops, speaks online 'to the computer' or gives keynote speeches he communicates with passion, enthusiasm and lots of humour.

He passionately cries " With the ubiquitous use of social media and email as the default form of communication I worry that so many people are losing sight of the most effective and powerful form of communication. I mean of course the art of conversation and the use of the phone to start or reignite relationships"
